

Foundations™

The Project Management Simulation

Description

Foundations™ the Project Management Simulation is a one day, interactive project management simulation run in teams. It can be divided into sections to incorporate into project management training. Participants apply project management skills, tools, and techniques – putting them all into perspective.

Real-world experiences, conflicting priorities, evolving or ambiguous regulations, staffing changes, and organizational distractions unfold as the simulation progresses – impacting the project plan and forcing the team and its leader to reconsider decisions, deal with unanticipated risks, and actively control the project to keep it on track and on budget. Detailed, practical, measurable feedback from the team's results and verbal feedback from facilitators, observers, and peers, provide a lasting experience to develop critical project management skills and behaviors which transform learning into action when participants return to work.

The simulation includes all elements of a project, beginning with interactions with the project sponsor, defining the project, clarifying the goals, high-level and detailed planning and budgeting, monitoring, controlling, completing, and evaluating. For longer programs where you have time to address risk management, earned value, early and late finish times, etc. you can easily have participants apply these concepts to in the simulation.
